GLOBAL MOBILITY EXECUTIVE

GME LEADERS EXCHANGE · HOUSTON · OCTOBER 20, 2026

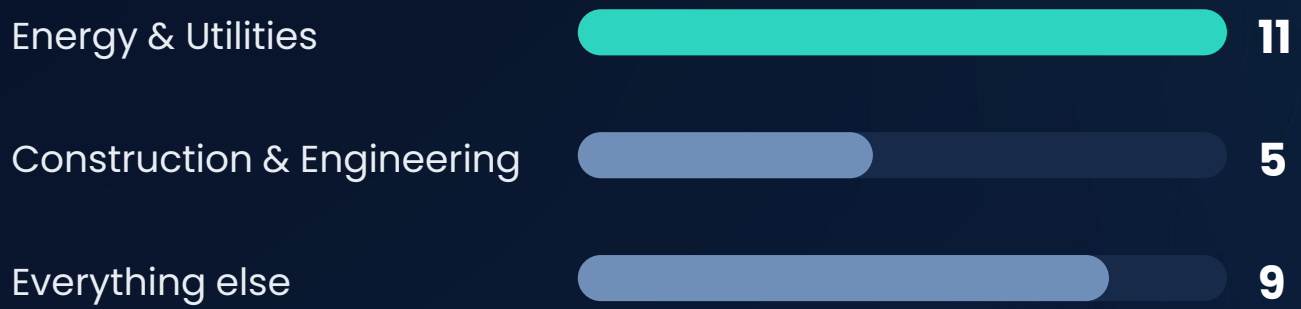

The Room and the wider Market.

Before anyone spoke, the 25 leaders in the room told us how their programs really run. Here is what they said, next to the wider market.

POWERED BY CBIQ

25 leaders. 20 organizations. Mostly energy.

WHO WAS IN THE ROOM

76%

expect Global Mobility's scope and complexity to grow in the next 12 months (19 of 25)

Every delegate contributes a verified program profile at registration; everything here is aggregated, and no organization is identified.

Immigration and regulatory change is pressure number one, by a distance.

Immigration tops the pressure list across the whole market too. What marks this room out is how many feel it at once, with tax compliance also running at twice the market rate (20% vs 10%).

Everyone expects more work. Fewer have a plan for it.

The growth expectation is universal. The written strategy to receive it is not: most of the market has one, most of this room does not yet.

CBIQ benchmark, 797 leaders. Scores of 5 or above on a 0 to 7 scale.

The ambition is automated. The tooling is manual.

CBIQ benchmark, bases 758 and 750.

16% of the room runs a dedicated Global Mobility platform (4 of 25). Market: 30%.

The room plans to automate at the market's pace, but starts from further back: twice as many programs here run on spreadsheets as run on a dedicated platform.

Everyone believes in AI. Almost nobody has been asked for it.

84% of the room says AI and automation will most reshape Global Mobility in the next three years (21 of 25)

Market: 59%

The conviction is personal rather than mandated, which may explain why 10 of the 17 leaders who answered our funding question have never proposed technology investment at all.

CBIQ benchmark, bases 705 and 702.

The deal with the mobile workforce is changing.

CBIQ benchmark, 722 leaders.

In this room, employees are asking for careers from their moves more than packages around them, almost the reverse of the wider market, and the support model has not yet been redesigned around that.
